About the New Social Capital

Social Capital is widely seen as the overall value of a community and the connections between the people and organizations within. As our communities continue to expand globally on the Internet, the value of Social Capital has changed dramatically. Social media giants are cashing in on the value of user data and the connections shared between them.

About the EF Hutton Talks Conference Series

The “EF Hutton Talks Conference Series” is designed to shed a national spotlight on specific issues in a wide range of socioeconomic topics affecting Americans in the digital age. The overall goal is to bring together thought leaders and business executives from industries like social networking, data security and personal finance to define and discuss problems and potential solutions to issues like user rights, privacy, the U.S. savings crisis, and more. Each conference will address topics through panel discussions, keynote speakers and breakout sessions.

Premier Sponsors for the event are EF Hutton, a worldwide leader in the fintech sector, and HUTN, Inc., with other considerations provided by Megga, Inc., and Vibrant Mobility. Sponsorships are still available by contacting the communications department at EF Hutton.
